Comparisons of Late War With Other Wars Shows Advance in Medical Science and All Preventive Medicine

and All Preventive Medicine

WASHINGTON, Oct. 18s-Because of the unianutily high standard of neath maintained in the army both at home and abroad the annual report of the surgeon-general is awaited here with considerable interest. This report will give, it is expected the final figures compiled by the medical department on the results of its work since organization of our world war forces. Some of the figures already compiled show that the work of the American medical corps not only far exceeded its own record in past wars, but was probably without parallel even among the armies of our allies and chemies in this war.

Medical men and professional soldiers all over the advancement in medico-military science that has been brought about since the Spanish and Civil wars. Only one of the several epidemics that attacked our army left any great impression, the Spanish influenza or "fili" with which the Reaper swept not only the military, but to an even larger extent the civilian populations of the enemy, our allies and ourselves. This was an unexpected hayoe, that might have exacted an even greater toil but for the fact that the organized medical corps was in a position to check it and issue information and insuructions for helping the civilian public to combat it.

Mackinaws swim deep and nothing but copper wire will resist their powerful laws. Oscar Pall caught a tenpounder a few days ago that had enjoyed a previous experience on the end of a fishing line. Its mouth contained a white devil spoon with 100 fest of copper wire attached.

OF TREE PLANTING

Importance of road building and tree planting has been impressed on the American soldier (abroad, says the American Forestry association, of Washington, as perhaps no other one thing. The soldier knew what it meant to have the army trucks "get up there when a show was on." In its campaign for, "Roads of Remembrance" in the Upited States the American Forestry association calls stiention to the New York Times, which says:

"Signs multiply that the returning soldier is to be the strongest of all aposities of good roads.

"In the misds of our soldiers, however, the military need of stone roads seems less important than the commercial need and always a deep sense seems present to the beauty of the smooth and shaded highway. The Amaroc News, official organ of our army on the Rhine, points out that of the 2,755, see miles of highway in the United States, less the 25,000 miles, or one in ten, has any form of surfacing whatever. Rut it becomes lyric when it notes that in France cach road, it matters not how small or how seldom used, has its quota of beauliful shade trees whose limbs form an arch to protect the traveler from the sun."

Burr's Old Dueling Pistols Are Sold At Philadelphia Auction

PHILADELPHIA, Oct. 16.- A pair of flint-lock dueling pistois, made by Booth, the early gunsmith of Philadelphia, which were presented to Caesar A. Redney, once attorney-general of the United States, by Col. Aaron Burr, his inthmate friend, and which family tradition insists were used in the Burr-Hamilton duel; Howdon's nie mask of Gen. Washington: five mahogany Chippendale chairs, which were tien. Washington's, and were used in the presidential mansfor in Philadelphia, and furniture which formerly belonged to Charles Carroll, of Carrollton, signer of the Declaration of Independence, form part of an interesting historical sale which took place recently in this city. The pistols stand as a mute monument to the passions of men, as Rodney had the disagreeable task, later, of prosecuting his friend Burr for treason. The mask was taken from the living face of Washington in Philadelphia by Houdon, who had received, in 1785, a commission from Dr. Benjamin Franklin to make the statue of Washington which is in the state house at Richmond. There are also historical relies from the estates of Col. Thomas Rodney, member of the continental congress, and Ceasar Rodney, signer of the Declaration of Independence.

There is something of a siir among collectors of antiques with special historical significance, and especially among representatives of historical museums, a large number of which have sprung up since the war in different parts of the country, to secure these relics.
